Suggested Passwords

Passwords are words, and words have meaning. From time to time, an organization may need to assign a password to an outside group or individual. Instead of choosing a random word, or making up a nonsense word, it can be helpful to have a list of “approved” passwords to pick from. Below are some suggested passwords, each with an inspiring or uplifting emotional connotation.

For the sake of security, it is suggested that these common dictionary words be combined with numbers either before or after these words. (IE: Royal454, or 329accurate.) This will defeat most “dictionary attack” hacker systems. However, not all passwords need to be “that secure”. In addition, most systems combine a password with a UserID name. A password without the UserID should be useless.
